

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Preface

Introduction

The Life Of Cicero

BOOK I: THE NATURE OF MORAL GOODNESS

I. Introduction. Importance of Greek and Latin studies and philosophy. Value of Cicero's works

II. Importance of moral and ethical studies. Statement of purpose. Studies of moral duties by others

III. Parts of a treatise on duties. Different types of duties. Panaetius's categories of duties. Cicero's five categories of duties

IV. How Nature forms man and animals. Importance of reason. Social bonds of man. Man's quest for truth. Importance of morals for society

V. The four sources of moral goodness, and their importance

VI. The search for truth and higher learning

VII. Justice, kindness, and generosity. Private property. Good faith. Types of injustice and why people do wrong

VIII. Danger of ambition. Passion and premeditation. Inflicting injury on others

IX. Reasons for failing to prevent injustice. Justice and doubt

X. Changeability of duty. Reasons to change or break promises. How manipulation can cause injustice

XI. Duties to those who harm us. The laws of war. Rights of the vanquished

XII. Guests and enemies. Moral grounds for waging war

XIII. Keeping promises to enemies. Example of Regulus. Negotiations with Hannibal

XIV. Generosity and kindness. How to bestow favors. Caution when being generous. Function of merit

XV. When a man should be favored. Reasons for being generous. Affection and love. Differences in favors received. Assistance given according to need

- XVI. Function of personal relationships. Social bonds. Common welfare
- XVII. Types of social relations. Citizens. Family. Friends. Patriotism. Hierarchy of obligations
- XVIII. Every case is specific. Circumstances differ. Greatness of spirit. Importance of bravery and nobility
- XIX. Definition of courage. Connection of justice and moral rectitude. Qualities of just men. Danger of lust for power. Preventing harm to others. Ambition and injustice
- XX. Features of a great soul. Moral courage. Strength of character. Love of riches. Beware of passions of the soul. Retiring to the countryside
- XXI. Government service. Involvement in public affairs. Importance of public service. Caution in entering public life
- XXII. Achievements of war and peace. Historical examples of courage in public service. Themistocles. Solon. Lysander. Pausanias. Catiline's conspiracy
- XXIII. Physical strength. Presence of mind. Intellectual ability. When to fight
- XXIV. Avoiding cruelty. Dealing with danger. Surviving peril. Primacy of patriotism
- XXV. Requirements of governance. Duties of leaders. Factionalism. Corruption. Persecution of political enemies. Punishment and proportionality
- XXVI. Behavior in prosperity. Need for modesty. Seeking counsel of friends. Activities of a great spirit. How the man of affairs manages his property
- XXVII. Temperance and decorum. Their relation to fortitude. Classifications of decorum.
- XXVIII. Decorum and moral duties. How decorum promotes well-being. Need to use Nature as a guide
- XXIX. Actions must have motives. Freedom from undue passions. Control of the appetites. Frivolity
- XXX. Difference between man and animals. Sensual pleasure. General and specific natures of every man. Qualities of some great men
- XXXI. Behavior and personality. Personal conduct. Consistency in individual actions. Every man has a different path. Examples from history and literature. Importance of knowing one's own abilities
- XXXII. Other things that shape character. Career. Patrimony. Fortune. Choices. Entering the right path. Examples from legend

XXXIII. Choosing the right path. How Nature guides us in career choice. How to change one's career. When not to imitate our fathers

XXXIV. Duties of youth and of old age. Duties of judges. Duties of foreigners. Duties of citizens

XXXV. Decorum in physical settings. Beauty and discretion. Modesty. Lewd talk and behavior. Avoiding extremes of conduct. Criticism of the Cynics. Using Nature as a guide

XXXVI. Beauty, dress, and decorum. Correct posture. Personal discipline. Impulses and thoughts

XXXVII. Power of speech. The properties of speech. Art of conversation. Characteristics of good conversation

XXXVIII. Using self-control in conversation. Reprimanding others. Anger

XXXIX. What type of house a man should have. Features of a good house. Moderation in expenditure. Three requirements for action

XL. Matching conduct with occasion. Judgment. Prudence. Calibration of speech. Impropriety. Being mindful of small things

XLI. Drawing conclusions from small things. Watching mistakes of others. Consulting men of learning. Customs and rules of communities. Respecting bonds of fellowship

XLII. Respectable trades. Vulgar trades and occupations. Men worthy of respect. Benefits to society

XLIII. Four sources of moral goodness reviewed. Anticipated conflicts. Wisdom the primary virtue. Sociability and knowledge. Duties derived from wisdom. Priority of duties

XLIV. Life of scholars. Mere knowledge not enough. Justice takes priority over other virtues. Human society more vital than speculation or knowledge

XLV. Temperance. Moderation. Resolving conflicts in duties. Needs of society. Choosing between duties

Commentary On Book I

BOOK II: ADVANTAGEOUSNESS

I. Nature of expediency. Cicero's background and career. Ruin of the republic. Marginalization of Cicero

- II. Why philosophy is essential. Are Cicero's beliefs consistent?
- III. Five rules described. Definition of advantageousness. Relation to moral rectitude. Things essential to human life. Human cooperation
- IV. Civilization's need for social cooperation and human bonding
- V. Cooperation of great men. Man as source of help and harm to others. Three properties of virtue
- VI. Fortune in human affairs. Fortune and cooperation. Six personal motives of men in helping others
- VII. Love as the best motive. Fear as bad motivator. Tyrants. Consequences of repression and fear
- VIII. Historical examples from the old republic. Sulla. Corruption and its consequences. Power of goodwill. The devotion of friends
- IX. Nature of glory. The three bases of glory. Beneficent services. Inspiring confidence. Justice more inspirational than wisdom
- X. Respect of our peers. What qualities people admire
- XI. Justice the most admirable quality. Three bases of glory also apply to justice. Codes of honor among bandits
- XII. Why kings are chosen. Justice is the path to glory
- XIII. How to win a good reputation. Military glory. Character. Mentorship of other great men. Facility in speaking
- XIV. Conversation and public speaking. Types of speeches. Historical examples. Defense better than prosecution. When to avoid a death-penalty case
- XV. Generosity. Kindness. When to show moderation. Monetary gifts
- XVI. Types of big donors. Wasteful public spectacles. Public entertainment
- XVII. Avoiding reputation for miserliness. Need for balance between generosity and stinginess. Justification for monetary gifts. Spending on public infrastructure
- XVIII. Guidelines for generosity. Balance between kindness and memory. Business relations. Hospitality. Receiving visitors
- XIX. Giving through personal service. The legal profession. Cultivation of good speaking. Art of eloquence. Current decline of good speaking

XX. When to offer services to others. Their character and situation. Gratitude shown by the poor. Generosity to those in need is rewarded. Character more important than money. The key rule of personal service

XXI. Public service. Public official's duty to protect property. Property taxes. Need for the public to share in official burdens. Avoiding any hint of corruption

XXII. Integrity of Africanus. Other historical examples. Greed. Self-restraint. Land distribution laws. Confiscation of property

XXIII. Spartan land reform. Example of Aratus of Sicyon. Fair method of land reform. Unjust confiscation of wealth

XXIV. Debt burdens that harm society. Why Cicero once opposed debt forgiveness. Personal health and expediency

XXV. Balancing advantageousness. What factors to consider

Commentary on Book II

BOOK III: WHEN MORAL GOODNESS COMES INTO CONFLICT WITH ADVANTAGEOUSNESS

I. How Scipio Africanus enjoyed leisure. Why he was great

II. Need to work hard at academic studies. What Panaetius and Posidonius discussed. What Panaetius forgot to discuss

III. Previous views on conflict between advantageousness and moral rectitude. Stoic view of "medium duties"

IV. Types of duties being discussed. Danger of balancing morality and advantageousness. What good men do. Uncertainty in moral obligation. Need for rules when moral conflicts develop

V. Injustice of taking from others. Nature's laws. Laws of societies. Reason in Nature. Greatness of spirit. Example of Hercules

VI. Equating the individual interest with the common interest. Duty not to harm others. Self-interest never excuse for harming others. The common good as Nature's law

VII. Not necessary to cover every detail. Moral goodness the only real good. The advantageous must also be morally good

VIII. Nature abhors moral corruption. Moral goodness the only expediency. Consequences of forgetting this. Moral corruption not possible to hide

IX. Tale of the ring of Gyges. Doing right when no one is checking

X. Appearance of advantageousness. No expediency without moral rectitude. Historical examples. Personal interests. Duties to friends. Example of Damon and Phintias. General rules to follow in cases of friends

XI. Cruelty never expedient. Advantageousness for the state. Athens during Persian invasions. Themistocles

XII. Moral conflicts in commercial transactions. Mercantile affairs. Differing views of Diogenes and Antipater. May truth be hidden?

XIII. Duties of sellers of goods. Differing views

XIV. Fraud in the inception. Willful misrepresentation. Pythius and Canius's real estate transaction

XV. Duty not to engage in fraud or defalcation. Duty of good faith in business. The need to transcend self-interest. Immoral acts never advantageous

XVI. Disclosure required in property transactions. House of Tiberius Claudius. Significance of Cato's ruling. Example of Marcus Marius Gratidianus

XVII. Differing ways of philosophers and the law. Moral law and codified law. Need for good faith. Example of Quintus Scaevola. Chicanery is not wisdom, and is against Nature

XVIII. Example of a forged will. Appearance of expediency vs. appearance of moral goodness

XIX. Good men resist the lust for money and power. Nature of a good man. Example of Caius Fimbria. Nothing advantageous that is not morally good

XX. Excuses for doing wrong. Example of Caius Marius. Example of Gratidianus. Small violations carry large consequences. Material gain not worth loss of reputation

XXI. Mistakes of Pompey and Caesar. Ambition. Expediency must be evaluated according to moral goodness. Expediency must be equivalent to moral rectitude

XXII. Example of Pyrrhus and Fabricius. Example of the publicans. Cato's flawed policies. Curio's flawed policies

XXIII. Hecaton's moral hypotheticals as questions. Imaginary debate between Diogenes and Antipater

- XXIV. When we may breach promises. Personal health. Preservation of reputation
- XXV. Promises breached when not advantageous for promisees. Breaking oath to prevent violence or harm. Two divisions of moral goodness
- XXVI. Example of Ulysses's faked madness. Regulus as prisoner of Carthage
- XXVII. Regulus's heroic honoring of his word
- XXVIII. Expediency must not be separated from moral goodness. Our impulse is to seek the expedient. Objections to Regulus's decision. Choosing the least of two evils. Duress not creating a binding contract
- XXIX. Solemn oaths backed by divine law. Oaths backed by good faith. Pain not the supreme evil. Moral corruption the greatest evil. Oaths to criminals. Oaths to enemies
- XXX. Examples from Roman history. Caudine Forks. National interest takes precedence over personal interest. No expediency without moral goodness
- XXXI. Discussion of the conduct of Regulus. Example of Titus Manlius Torquatus
- XXXII. Example of Hannibal's ten emissaries. How Hannibal knew he was beaten. Cowardly acts not expedient, but shameful
- XXXIII. Temperance, self-restraint, and moderation. Flawed doctrine of the Epicureans. Contradictions in Epicurean doctrine. Moral goodness cannot be based on pleasure or personal advantage. Concluding message to young Cicero

Commentary on Book III

Index